

TAP NYC, one of the best places to eat Brazilian food in New York

Hey New Yorkers! I'd like to introduce you to an amazing place with delicious Brazilian food.

We know the Big Apple is known as gastronomic capital of the world. Around here, you can find tapioca, cheese bread and açaí. These delights make up the menu at TAP NYC, one of the best places to eat Brazilian food in New York with healthy, gluten-free and very tasty options.

TAP NYC Midtown East is located at 43rd Street and Third Avenue, close to iconic New York attractions, such as the Grand Central Terminal, Chrysler Building and Summit One Vanderbilt. The unit is also about a 15-minute walk from Times Square, one of the most visited places in NYC.

The proximity to tourist attractions makes the Brazilian restaurant in Manhattan stand out as a wonderful spot for breakfast, lunch and afternoon snack.

With a menu that brings together some of the most popular delicacies from Brazil, the place is a good option for Brazilians traveling with children, those who do not want to escape their food routine during the trip and even for people who just want to kill their homesickness.

The place is very successful for serving the legitimate cheese bread in New York. You can opt for the traditional one or try the delicious pesto and spicy versions. I'm sure you'll love it!
